

Two university students went out for a drive and parked down an isolated country road one night. When they tried to leave, the car wouldn't start. The boyfriend said he would walk for help, but suggested his girlfriend hide in the back under a blanket so no one would see her. He told her not to get out of the car or move what ever happened. Then he walked off, leaving her hidden.

He didn't return, and she waited and waited.

Suddenly she heard a tap-tap-tapping sound on the roof of the car. Tap tap.....tap. She started to feel nervous but kept her promise to her boyfriend, and stayed waiting under the blanket, listening to the drip- drop-tap on the roof.

As it started to get light outside, she heard a voice through the window. It was the local police, and they shouted “come out of the car, walk towards us and don’t look back!” She got out from under the blanket, opened the car door and started to walk towards the waiting police car on the other side of the road. As she reached the policeman, she couldn’t stop herself from turning around to look at the car. There she saw her boyfriend’s head, stuck on the radio antenna, dripping blood slowly onto the roof of the car. Tap, tap, tap.